Little Siss' shoreowners to host nature program

Published: Wednesday, May 21, 2008 11:03 AM CDT

The Little Sissabagama Shoreowners Association will host an open educational nature program Saturday, May 24 following the association's annual spring meeting.

Last fall the association entered into a partnership with Western Wisconsin Land Trust (WWLT) to protect the historic 30-acre Stout Island (Big Island) now called the Frank Stout Nature Preserve. The conservation easement will protect the island in perpetuity to achieve the goal set by the former owner and lumberman, Frank Stout.

"The island has the rare qualities of a state natural area," explained Rick Gauger, Executive Director of WWLT. "The property has been faithfully cared for by the Little Sissabagama Shoreowners Association, and we are happy to make the protection permanent." As part of the agreement

WWLT's Bill Dingwall will direct the first program of its kind this Saturday starting at approximately 11:30 a.m. to noon. He will review the types of trees that populate the preserve, the rare ferns and other fauna, and talk about the overall
